Our morning tourist, Mr. Adams, mounted upon a fleet mustang, will take your order. If you phone us our Mr. Brown will, while wrapping up goods, hook his ear over the wire and register your order. IN THE STILLY NIGHT.

A Farmer and Merchant Despoiled of their Chattels.

Mr. N. B. Douglass, a prominent farmer living near Mart and Mr. Ward Huling, a merchant of Mart, came into the city yesterday, the former to sell three bales of cotton, the latter to attend to some business. Mr. Douglass sold his cotton about four o'clock in the afternoon receiving a check for same for $148.25 from Thompson Bros. and drawn on the Waco State Bank. He put this in his pocket book which contained, besides, $65 in money and some papers. The two remained in town last night and something after twelve o'clock at night went to their stopping place, the Mitchell House, near the corner of Third and Franklin street and went to bed in room No. 21. The room contained two beds and one of the beds had an occupant, a young man of about twenty five, who had come to the house a stranger, about ten o'clock; paid for his lodging in advance and retired about twelve. Mr. Huling woke up about four o'clock in the morning when, he says, the young man had gone. He lay awake till six, when he and Mr. Douglas got up to find themselves robbed. Their pants which had been placed under their pillows when they went to bed, had been removed and their clothes, pocket-books and papers were scattered about the room. Mr. Douglass says he lost the check mentioned and sixty-five dollars in money. Mr. Huling lost a silver watch and gold chain. He had twenty dollars in his pocket-book, which the thief, who had gone through it, had evidently missed. The payment of the check was stopped as soon as the banks were notified. Suspicion very naturally fell on the young man who had occupied the same room, and telegrams giving a description of him were sent to towns accessible by trains leaving town since the robbery was committed, while diligent search is being made in the city.

AFTERNOON NOTES.

LeDoux will duplicate prices of any reliable jewelry firm.

Our genial neighbor, the Plaindealer & Crescent has the kindness to remark in this weeks issue, thus:

Before selecting your Christmas presents call on E. P. LeDoux, for prices. His stock of jewelry is complete, and prices low, 403 Austin Ave.

The EVENING NEWS has settled comfortably and easily in its new quarters on Franklin street. We are glad to learn that it is growing in favor as it grows older. That veteran editor and writer, Prof. Hurwood is now pushing the labor for that enterprising journal.

Special attention is called to No. 403 Austin Ave. Mr. LeDoux's complete stock of fine jewelry, consisting of diamonds, watches, bronzes, Imported and Brass clocks, fine Silverware &c. He tells us that he is overstocked and in order to reduce it, he will sell at a great reduction during December. He will not be undersold.

STOLEN.—Last night from the premises of Mr. J. W. Higgins, on Austin street, a dark chestnut sorrel horse, branded T. U. B. on left shoulder, nine years old, has one white foot. Leave information if seen at livery stable of Molder & Hearne.

John H. Appel's receipt for five dollars a month relieved for the benefit of the poor, during the present winter, would be a nice thing to have in the pocket by the unlucky ones who step off into the great unknown in 1889. It wouldn't have to be endorsed neither.

The police court cried in vain for its daily victim this morning. The only case picked up by the police yesterday was a dejected looking tramp, tattered and woe begone. The kindly heart of Marshal Neil was touched and instead of marching him to the calaboose he pointed out to him the road to Austin, and bade him take it. He gave the poor devil a good breakfast though and sent him out of town on a full stomach.

One of the finest Music Boxes the writer ever saw was seen this afternoon at J. P. Williamson's, otherwise the White Elephant. To the lover of fine mechanism it is a treat. This miniature piano produces the sweetest melody imaginable, and with the cylinder movement is accompaniments of bass drum, snare drum, bells and other things, which makes it a perfect band. It could be used effectively for private dances. There are mechanical contrivances for stopping or repeating tunes for disassembling one or all of the accompanying miniature instruments, and other contrivances for giving volume etc., that are models of ingenuity. The tunes played, ten in number, are some of the newest and most popular, including five dancing pieces, complete melodies and choice selections from operas. The most charming piece of ingenuity is an automatic apparatus which as the tunes are changed, moves a hand over a brass dial, and indicates the tune which is then being played by number corresponding to the numbers attached to the list of tunes. This beautiful music producing machinery is appropriately set in a case of the finest rose-wood and equate workmanship, making it a souvenir for the parlor.
